Windbreaks for Shrubs Serve Two Purposes

Windbreaks for evergreen shrubs in winter serve a two-fold purpose — one being to filter a freezing wind before it reaches the shrub; the second, to filter the effect of a drying wind on the foliage.

The damage by a freezing wind is often apparent shortly afterwards, but the effect of a drying wind is seldom noticed until early April or when roots become more active.

Evergreens, both the ones with Broad green leaves all winter like the arbutus, laurel, yucca and cameilia, and the coniferous such as pines, jumpers and chamaecyparis, are not completely dormant in winter because loss of moisture (transpiration) from their green foliage demands maintainance by moisture replacement from roots to leaves.

In rainy, mild weather these shrubs and trees have no problem which is why so many thrive here on the Pacific Coast. It is when cold dry air comes in that the less hardy begin to suffer.

The soil is frozen for the few inches down where most of the feeding roots lie, thus making conditions impossible for the absorption of moisture.

Meanwhile the foliage, either needles, scales or leaves, is loosing moisture to the dry air moving across it. If this cannot be replaced by a supply coming up from the roots, the plant becomes dehydrated.

This is comparable to a human on a dry day in either winter or summer loosing moisture through the skin and experiencing thirst without being able to take in sufficient to replace the quantity lost.

By dry, we mean an unnaturally low relative humidity for the area.

Occasionally this drops to 35 or 40 per cent locally in winter then we are inclined to disregard needs of outdoor

When small, young specimen shrubs are threatened, use out branches of other hardler evergreens put in teepee fash-ion around the shrub.

By the same token, plantings of hardy material form natural windbreaks for less hardy material. This is the art of garden design—the use of a plant, not only for its own aesthetic value but for its value in the community of plants you are assembling for your pleasure.

wall to the backs of sinus spaces, the foundation.

Improbably as this may seem, the reflected heat (or light) is capable of burning camellia leaves, and those of thinner evergreen texture like pieris or leucothoe. The reason is that the back of the plant is more protected against the wall and is therefore "softer"—less hardy; another good reason for planting three feet out from the foundation.

that follows, it would appear that all South can make at his small slam contract are 11 tricks. In actual practice, however, 12 tricks were there for the taking through the utilization of a play known as the "dummy reversal" play. The essence of this type of play is the thinking in terms of dummy being the declarer; and the play's basic feature is to do the ruffing in the closed hand. Both sides vulnerable.

the reader might raise the point. "But what if the five adversely-held trumps were divided 4-1, rather than she actual 3-2? In this case. wouldn't South then be unable to cash four diamond tricks, since the defender with four Warren said the Tory party will present a full slate of 55 candidates in the next election. It will reject the argument that the NDP must be feared as the alternative to Social Credit, he said.

The party's view is that the Social Credit government is coming to an end and the Progressive Conservative party will be the alternative, Warren said.

If given status as a full house leader, Wallace would be able to speak in the budget and throne speech debates on the same day as Opposition Leader Dave Barrett and Liberal Leader Pat McGeer.

But Wallace said today "it doesn't matter to me perwhen he is scheduled to speak.

"What I have to say is more important than when it is said," he added expressing the hope that he would also be given a full share of legislative committee work.

Wallace said he would be speaking in the chamber more frequently than in the past two years in his new role as Tory use leader. But he wouldn't be speaking just for the sake of speaking, he said.

Warren said the problem of communication with Wallace during session hasn't been solved but he would be spending some time in Victoria himself and thought will be given to having other party representatives here.

But Wallace's position as an MLA means that his con-tribution as yet unformed party policies will be a major one,

Warren said Wallace's "independence of thought" and his "gift of integrity" will be key elements in the rebuilding of the Tories in B.C. The effort, including Wallace's position in the legislature, will be an experiment in combining individual freedom with party action, he said.

Board to Rule On New Staff

Greater Victoria school board again Monday night delayed making a firm decision on the issue of hiring replace-ments for teachers leaving during the board's education committee meeting, when staff changes were presented by the district administration or approval. Listed among the changes were proposed appointments of three teachers, as well as a fourth for which the district would not have to pay.

It was decided after considerable discussion that the approval for the appointments would be considered at the hoard's regular meeting next Monday as an item separate from the usual releases. leaves-of-absence and

AN INDICATION

Trustees agreed that the way they vote at that time on the appointments would be a definite indication of the board's wishes for hiring of replacement staff.

Board chairman Allan Mc-Kinnon said he found it "unrealistic" for the board to go on replacing teachers when it has more than $900,000 to find to meet the requirements of the 1972 provisional budget.

"Now is the time to start thinning out. It's wrong to go drifting and dreaming along thinking we have the same kind of money to pay for teachers when we don't."

ESSENTIAL

District superintendent A. J. Longmore said is some cases replacement of teachers is essential to the stability of the school and classroom. If several teachers from the same school were to leave at the same time, big adjust-ments would have to be made which would not benefit students.

Longmore said some of the teachers hired as replacements from November on were on a conditional month-to-month basis and could be dropped with 30 days' no-

REVEAL WISHES

"I don't think the adminis-tration is being unrealistic in its hiring policy," he said.

McKinnon said he hoped there would be no misunder-standing between the board and the administration. If it is necessary for the board to make an explicit statement of its wishes, then it would, he said. This could be done at the regular board meeting.

Geoffroy's Bridal Flight Brings Tougher Rules

OTTAWA — Yves Geoffroy's breach of trust in running away with his new bride while on a 50-hour leave from prison may make it tougher for other long-term prisoners to get such leaves.

Solicitor-General Jean-Pierre Goyer said Monday the system will have to be refined to prevent further such escapes by long-term prisoners. Geoffroy had served 14 months of a

Dome Launches Bid For Record Gas Sale

OTTAWA (CP) - The National Energy Board began hearings today on applica-tions to export 139 million barrens of ethane and 111 million barrels of propane to the U.S.

Discussion centred on the ethane export application as lawyers for the applicants and for intervening companies dis-agreed on whether the sub-stance should be classed as natural gas.

Ethane, a liquid hydrocar-bon extracted from natural gas in Alberta, has not previously been exported and has had limited use in Canada as a separate substance.

The would-be exporter, Dome Petroleum Ltd., is ar-guing that the board should base its decision on whether ethane to be exported is sur-plus to Canadian needs.

But it also contends that even if ethane is included in the estimates of natural gas needs, the quantity to be exported is surplus.

BIGGEST U.S. SALE

Mr. Richards said the project constituted "the highestpriced large-scale energy sale to the U.S." ever undertaken. The 139 million barrels of ethane, 231 billion cubic feet in gaseous form, would produce as much heat as 406 bilthe company estimated. It also said that ethane enhances the value of natural

In briefs filed with the board, Dome Petroleum said Canada could produce 218,000-barrels a day of ethane but only 2,000 are being produced. That volume is being used by Canadian Industries Ltd. at an Edmonton petrochemical plant for polyethelene manufacture.

The board recently found, in another case, that Canada has no surplus of natural gas available for export.

He said the U.S. customer, Columbia Liquid Natural Gas Corp., "desperately need this pipeline by 1973." Engineering preparations had already started for the 2,000-mile pipeline which would carry the liquid hydrocarbons to a Co-lumbia plant to be built at Green Springs, Ohio.

Economic Leadership Needed

Two salient concepts emerged television interview last Sunday evening. One was that there is almost no hope that Canadians can "buy back Canada" from the large investments by American capital in the past. The other was that the situation could be greatly improved by concentrating on the future and directing our economy for the rest of this century towards new Canadian development by Ca-

In this regard, it will be necessary for Canadians to specialize their efforts - as Japan, for instance, has forged to the front as a producer of electronic goods and to take full advantage of our country's possession of large reserves of natural resources and en-

Words alone, however, can have little effect. Mr. Trudeau indicated that the government's long study on Canada's basic economic problems will be released from Prime Minister Trudeau's that this will provide a program for Canadian development.

Mr. Trudeau said he is against economic nationalism if it makes a country poor, but that Canada appears to be in a position today where it can still "pick and choose," becoming more economically independent without becom-

It was obvious that Mr. Trudeau was speaking with restraint: there were no grandiose claims to early Canadian economic independence, or that it would be easily achieved without "hard gambling choices." But it was equally clear that a much better situation can be attained if the people are willing to work towards it.

It is difficult to foresee what the future world economy will be: The rise of international corporations, for one thing, has brought a whole new element into the picture. Obviously a country well endowed with natural resources, as Canada is, should hold a good posi- closer-to the action.

tion in world trade - at least, as long as the resources last.

But Canadians must decide if the larder role will provide sufficient outlet for Canadian efforts and a high enough return for the people. There is no reason why the cream of the returns from production should be won by other nations merely because Canada does not have the will to process its resources at frome rather than reap the quicker, but lower, returns available from shipping raw materials abroad.

Canadian experience makes it clear that a substantial change in our economic habits will have to be led by government, since the major alternative so far has been provided by foreign ownership. The forthcoming government report may be a big step toward this goal. But whether or not it is the first step, it cannot be the last. We have lived for a long time on the bounty of nature and neighbors. If we are to remain a viable nation we shall have to get a little

The Penalty of Bigness

PROBLEMS

Canadian people already have heard Prime Minister Trudeau's first major campaign speech in the election of 1972. But in that speech (disguised as a casual television interview at the end of 1971) there was much more than partisan politics. Whether he wins or loses the election, what he said about the broad future of government in Canada will remain true. It will be big government, and growing bigger.

The malady of elephantiasis afflicting governments everywhere has two obvithe politicians' appetite for power and the public's appetite for the services and bounties of the state. Less obvious but far more important is a third cause — the inherent nature and living organism of our mechanical soci-

When the first machine was invented it looked harmless enough. It promised man release from the brute toil of the ages and, in the Western world at least, fulfilled its promise handsomely. For this purpose, the economists tell us, in-dustry must have, "the economies of scale," the concentration of machinery and markets, if it is to produce a maxprice. So it must and so it does, giving us, in North America, what we are pleased to call the highest standard of living ever known on earth

While big government emerges inevitably from the higness of its rivals, and tries to referee their struggle, it does not follow, of course, that big government will succeed. It does not follow, either, that government makes itself any wiser by increasing its size. On the contrary, it follows that when it makes mistakes

Clearly, then, the immediate danger confronting us in the age of proliferating technology is not that the state will fail to grow sufficiently, but that it will grow too much and, with its power of central management, will mismanage everything will extinguish the individual democrat

How can we combine personal freedom with the machine and our greed for its products? How can we have big government, big business, big unions and big organizations of all kinds in control of the social machine without diminish ing man himself? The same old riddle faced all societies of the past and usually broke them in war or revolution but it now faces us on a scale unforeseen even a generation ago. The economies of scale, valid in an economic sense, cannot solve the riddle in a political sense. Something much larger and more difficult is required - a human species with enough intelligence to discipline its appetities, limit its expectations to its means and behave humanly before government turns men

This I take it, is what Mr. Trudeau has been talking about in the vague pre-election hints and smiling generalizations that must hide a man as puzzled as the rest of us. But as government of any party grows bigger and bigger we should watch what it actually does, not what it says. From now on it will need a

Unfair Attack

The chairman of the Regional Board should never have accused the voters of View Royal of having their heads in the sand. Such an unfair attack can do nothing but make a lot of very good people

View Royal has simply turned down an invitation to add to the river of sewage that has been flowing from the neighboring municipalities to the sea for far too long. If anyone has his head in the sand on this issue it is Mayor Hugh Curtis. He has refused to look at the new evidence against marine disposal and. conventional sewage treatment. He has chosen to stay with the outmoded way of doing things. He and the officials who follow his lead are all hung up on the same rusty hook.

Many will recall that only a few years ago Mr. Curtis, who now speaks so selfrighteously of protecting the Gorge, was in favor of putting a further half million gallons a day of Saanich sewage into Portage Inlet. The residents of View Royal and Portage Inlet (I was then one of them) stopped that one. It was said by the defeated Saanich officials at the tin that it was all a one-man show. The recent View. Royal vote certainly puts that myth to rest. The "one man" is half the world away but the View Royal community is still a fighting force. My congratulations to them on sticking to their guns - and their septic tanks.

Sewers in View Royal would not only have added to the pollution off Macaulay Point they would also have changed the character of View Royal. It would have become "progressive", with industry and high rise apartments which the people of the area have stated so clearly they do not want - and it would have lost its charm.

What View Royal has wanted for years, and is finally getting, is some help from the Health Department on its septic tank problem. Unfortunately health officers are acting reluctantly and from an admittedly prejudiced position. However, there are people in Greater Victoria who are up to date on improved septic tank practice.

View Royal citizens (and perhaps the Health Board) should be prepared to seek help to make sure the current upgrading of septic tank installations is carried through without delay, with the best techniques available at the moment and without unreasonable expense to those who have to take corrective action. Abortions

At Christmas and New Year, the government put on a big advertising campaign against drinking drivers and as an additional warning said that the police don't like to see dead children and don't want children killed.

Another news item at the same time stated that there were so many abortions being performed at Royal Jubilee Hospital that the staff there were getting demoralized.

How hypocritical can the government get. On the one hand it is so upset that a child might be killed by a drunken the hospitals to deliberately kill children by performing abortions and using our taxpayers' money from hospital insurance to do so.

The government might say that the Federal government passed a law to permit abortions or the killing of an infant human being. Still, the provincial government need not comply with this vile and unnatural law.

What is to become of this country? (Mrs.) Sylvia Boyles, Cobble Hill, B.C.

60 Years Ago

From the Times of Jan. 11, 1912:

WASHINGTON - Andrew Carnegie was an involuntary witness yesterday before the House committee probing the affairs of the United States Steel Corporation. Mr. Carnegie was requested the appear, but declined the invitiation, and was peremptorily summoned to Washington. He had once expressed a willingness to appear, but recently declined to testify on the ground that he was named as a defendant in the government's suit against the steel corporation.

An Echo of the Silent Siren

According to the Motor Vehicle Act a police car being used in discharge of official duties may be classed as an emergency vehicle if it is showing its red flasher and using a siren. Under such circumstances its driver may run through red traffic lights or stop signs and disregard other traffic rules. But he must also "drive with due regard for safety."

In a recent street accident a police car was in collision with a privately operated automobile when the latter, showing its proper turn signal, made a left turn while the patrol car was coming up on the left side of the street to avoid a traffic congestion.

The police car, responding to a bank, burglary alarm signal, showed its red flashing light but instead of the siren. The reason given was that it was standard police practice not to sound sirens while proceeding to the scene of a possible crime, for fear of warning the criminals.

On the basis of the evidence, the police driver was judged to be innocent of careless driving, and in view of the fact that he was conforming with established police practice his personal defence against wrongdoing appeared ade-

But there appears to be a discrepancy between the actual terms of the Motor Vehicle Act and accepted police practice inasmuch as the regular auto horn is not legally an alternative to the siren, bell or whistle which is specified in the Act. Although the citizen driver said he had not heard the horn, he might well have interpreted it, if heard, as a signal to hurry up and make his turn, whereas the siren would have been a signal to stop.

It is understandable that the police do not wish to warn criminals of their approach by using the siren, but they should interpret "due regard for safety" as including the recognition that other drivers may not respond to a horn as they would to a siren. A slight touch of the siren while still a mile from the emergency call, or a few seconds lost at an intersection, might help to speed police cars safely on their way for duties which no citizen would wish to

we celebrate the first New Year's baby after midnight, but in election years in America we note the arrival of the first Presidential candidate. Pray silence, then, for Big Ed Muskie of Maine, new-

His greatest asset is that he is a fair, intelligent, compassionate and candid man. His character was not formed by politics but by austerity, religion and the law, long before he stumbled into the political pit, and maybe this makes him too rigid, but after almost eight years of manipulative White House politics by Presidents Johnson and Nixon, it could be that the American people are ready for some plain dealing and straight talking. And this, rather than the war or the economy, could be the decisive political

Preferred Candidate

It is interesting, incidentally, that some of Nixon's principal political advisers insist that Senator Edward Ken-nedy and not Senator Muskie will be the Democratic nominee, and there is something about the way they insist on Ken-nedy that makes one think that they actually prefer him as the Democrat least able to challenge Mr. Nixon on the integ-

He has a better than any of the other Democratic candidates to hold the ambitious and pugnacious fragments of his party to gether after the family bloodletting of the primaries, and to avoid a fourthparty candidate on the Democratic left, who, with George Wallace on the right, could easily splinter the old Roose Democratic coalition and assure the reelection of President Nixon.

Accordingly, if you want to know where Muskie has been these last few months, and why he has not been commanding the headlines, the answer is that he has been listening, and waiting The explanation of Muskie's comparative silence is that he thinks the country's problems are complicated. That her journey had not been in vain became evident when she was asked what India was proposing to do about the Bengali refugees from East Pakistan.

Her passionate tirade against the policies which had led to the refugee problem was a virtuoso performance of what the most tone deaf pocognized at once was a written cadenza; and she ended it with the words 'and we have no intention of absorbing these people here — no mat ter what. It is, nowadays, unfashiona-ble to say of a woman politi-cian that she is essentially feminine. the obscurity from which he had been rash enough to emerge; and, politically, Mrs. Gandhi has effectively destroyed at least one powerful rival — Morarji Desai — of whom she now speaks with the casual unconcern of one who brushes a harmless insect from her sleeve.

And when she had decided that she would have to go to war to get the burden of 10 back she made her diplomatic preparations carefully and put her military machine into action secure in the certainty

Marxist Course?

Before the 14-day war there were many who had doubts about where Mrs. Gandhi was going. Some pointed to the re-striction of the princely purses, the property legislation and the nationalization of banks, together with India's growing affinity with the Soviet Union, and suggested that she was set on a Marxist

Others dismissed this professed egalitarianism as an ineffective smokescreen designed to cover her failure to solve India's fundamental economic problems. She herself rejects any po-litical label and seems to many Western observers to be alarmingly sanguine about the economy. She insists that the gap between population growth and food production does not exist — that India needs to rely on imports from

She says that the growth of her country's population is "only 38 per 1,000" and that this is a problem that causes more-concern in the West than in India.

If, after the spectacular success of the war against Pakistan, there are still any doubts about Mrs. Gandhi they must derive largely from this almost naive belief in the capacity of India to solve problems which would appal a leader less imperturbably

To accept that war between India and Pakistan was inevi-table is not to suggest that it was wise. Indira Gandhi may yet learn painfully the hard truth of one of her own pronouncements, made only a few days before she went to war — 'I don't believe that violence can solve any prob-lems. It can seem to solve them temporarily, but it creates more problems than it it now appears, she sees the future India not as one of the world's great problems, but as one of its great powers.

Drink Up, But After Work

Drink, it used to be said, is the shortest way out of Manchester. This is not of course a topical saying. It goes back to the time when drink was very cheap and Manchester was very dark en I first began patronizing pubs than is served now was tuppence a pint, old ale, very formidable, was three-pence (not our swindling new pence, of course), a tot of whisky was also three-pence; and you could buy it outside the pub at 3s 6d a bottle.

The pubs were open all day, and on early winter mornings you could call in for rum-and-coffee.

All that was in another world. I am not suggesting we should return to it. Even so, I think if I were running the country I would bring down the price of drink, with the possible exception of champagne and those sweet liqueurs; more likely to be made by industrial chemists then by nationt old more.

chemists than by patient old monks When a government and the compet-ve industrial system it admires create between them more and more worries and pressures, it seems to me a mean trick to pile more and more duty on drink and tobacco, which help men to feel easier in their minds and to exchange confidences.

Probably it is this trick that explains a certain sourness in our society, to-gether with a desire to grab more money even if it means a loss of honor and decency.

When I first arrived in London in the early 1920s I was introduced to a lot of hard drinking, in and around Fleet Street. The talk was probably the best I have ever heard, but it was nourished by round after round of "doubles.

The hardest drinkers kept to whisky, and I remember a very influential man of letters, staying with me, drinking a whole bottle betore lunch. Oddly enough, they neither neglected their work (though they ought to have been writing books instead of articles and reviews) nor died young and I cannot review. reviews), nor died young; and I cannot remember one of them ever being quar-relsome and bellicose.

And unlike the next generation of literary critics, they were never pompous, priggish and arrogant. They floated gently from office to pub to desk to book to pub again There was even harder and more dangerous drinking, I found, in America under Prohibition. This was the only time I have drunk whisky and gin very strong — in the middle of the I would call, let us say, about 10:30 on a publisher or editor, and he would immediately announce that he had "something very special, just off the boat," and to refuse a drink or two would have been insulting. A day begun like that could end at two in the morning, in a speakeasy owned by gangsters. As bad mistakes that went on and on, Prohibition and Victnam get the prizes.

Recently I have read some rather ominous statements by medical men equating hard drinking incidentally, not one of my weaknesses

Both may want to blur reality, but the other a disease. Hard drinkers enjoy booze; alcoholics hate it but must My wife, an authority on the distant past, tells me that men just emerging from the mists of lost time were al-ready busy fermenting intoxicating No doubt we abuse our liberty to abuse our liberty, being imperfect creato blur our reality with drink, boozing not out of sociability but out of despera-tion, if the reality we have created were

My advice now, coming out of long experience, is addressed to young men. Never, never drink, not a drop, when you are filled with self-pity and mise ble. Give yourself a job, even if it is only painting some bookshelves.

Unless there is some hereditary taint, you will never become an alcoholic if you do no drinking until you have done your day's work. If you have to prime yourself to get the work done, sooner or later you will be in bad trou-

Two fine actors I have known were in the sharpest contrast here. One of them, still in magnificent form, never takes a drink until the final curtain is takes a drink until the final curtain is down, and then, his work well done, he will pour out gin as if it were water.

The other needed a whole bottle of gin just to get through a performance, and after many a disaster he died:

Strong drink is not a medicine: it is a bonus, a spirit to lift our spirit a little but never to quench it.

Club Members Individuals

OTTAWA (CP) - Investors in mutual funds and members of investment clubs will be treated individually as taxpayers under the new tax law that came into effect Jan. 1, a revenue department spokesman said Monday.,

Each will be responsible for paying his own tax on capital gains or take the credit for any capital loss.

For most mutual funds, shares wil be valued as a starting point for the new tax system at their net asset value, or socalled bid price, on Dec. 31. A few mutual funds, which are called closed-end funds because they have a limited number of pubhave a limited number of pub-licly-traded shares, will be valued at Dec. 22.

The distinction between the two is simple, the spokesman said. If the fund is listed among the department's 3,000 publicly traded stocks, the valuation day is Dec. 22. If not so listed, it is Dec. 31.

Any profits realized on mu-tual funds after valuation day will have to be reported by the investor as income and half the amount will be taxed at the individual taxpayer's normal rate of income tax.

RETIREES WON'T PAY

However, holders of mutual funds who have subscribed to a registered retirement sav-ings plan will not be taxed on any capital gain.

Within limits prevailing under tax law, the money put into such plans was not taxed as it was earned, but the payout when the taxpayer retires will be taxed.

A club's portfolio will be valued as of Dec. 31—except for those parts of the portfolio which are publicly-traded shares, in which case the evaluation will be made according to the department's tirement, the taxpayer will pay a lower rate of tax than he did when he earned the modey to invest in the regis-tered refirement savings plan. The old law limited deductible cording to the department's Dec. 22 list. oid law limited deductible contributions to $1,500 a year for pension and profit-sharing plans, and $2,500 a year for registered retirement savings plans. The new limits are $2,500 and $4,000 a year respectively.

The spokesman said this is a general rule of thumb ap-plying to most investment clubs, but some of the larger clubs or ones which have un usual arrangements for their members should discuss their tax liability in the next few months with local offices of the revenue department.

The department has not yet decided whether to compile a list of bond values for the Dec. 31 valuation day apply-tax purposes.

The other water damage problems were tabled, pending further information from the municipal engineer, Geoffrey White, and the Oak Bay-solicitor, concerning liability.

There seems to be little doubt where the flooding fault lies — White told the committee Monday night "it appears from the plans this system (the storm sewer system in the areas most seriously flood hit) was a second thought."

At a special committee meeting Dec. 14, immediately following the flooding. White told aldermen the problem was with the system, which had been built cheaply—the pipes were too small, not root-resistant and laid too shallow for the area.

White said the only recommendation he could offer would be expensive lowering and improving of the entires ystem. Earlier.

Mao Leads Mourners To Chen Funeral

PEKING (Reuter) - The Chinese people mourned today the death of Foreign Minister Chen Yi, a colorful veteran revolutionary who won fame during the Communist battle for power.

Chinese leaders, including Chairman Mao Tse-tung and Madame Soong Ching-ling, the widow of Sun Yat-senthe founder of modern China and now a deputy chairman of the People's Republic, at-tended a ceremony Monday in Pa Pao Shan Cemetery of Fallen revolutionaries in western Peking to pay their last respects.

Chen Yi, who washed dishes and loaded barges in France as a young man to pay for his education, died last Thursday from cancer at the age of 70. Although Chen had rarely been seen in public since 1969, he was believed to have survived politically despite strong attacks on his policies by the Red Guards during the Cultural revolution.

Quebec Vows to Oppose Foreign Investment Curbs

QUEBEC (CP) — Quebec's industry minister predicted a rosy 1972 for the provincial economy Monday, while warning the issue of Quebec jobs must take precedence over any concern with foreign over any concern with foreign

Gerard D. Levesque, delivering an economic review and forecast at a news conference, predicted increased production and employment op-portunities, with a lower un-employment rate, for this

He said the gross provincial product should rise about nine per cent in the coming year, compared with 8.4 per cent in 1971 and 6.9 per cent in 1970. The net number of new jobs created this year should top last year's rise of 2.5 per cent, number of jobs created in the first 11 months of last year was 51,700, up from 12,000 in 1970

It was estimated that the number created for the whole year was 53,000 "which represents the highest increase since 1967." This is also higher than earlier estimates of 52,000 new jobs.

FEWER THAN PROMISED

However, it is fewer than the 100,000 new jobs in 1971 earlier reported as antelection campaign promise of the Liberal government in 1970, when it won power.

Mr. Levesque said Quebec will oppose vigorously any Ot-tawa policy on foreign invest-ment and ownership which vould restrict the creation of jobs in any way.

"We don't want to close the door on any foreign invest-ment which will bring more jobs for Quebecers. 'We can't afford to refuse.'

You remember Billy Reay? He played here for the old Cougars; coached too; at one time wanted to buy in at Seattle; also coached at Toronto in 1957-58 Oops! He didn't last there in his first chance either. He was out of a job the very next

But that gave him the chance to get the job at Chicago when Rudy Pilous was asked to leave. And he's been with the Hawks ever since the 1963-64 season, and even survived a last-place finished as late as 1968-69.

He was probably fortunate, because few others have survived each probably fortunate.

Emile Francis at New York is next in line in the peching order. He's been the coach off and on for several years - since 1965-66 to be price: But he's been the general manager too. Which helps. When Red Sullivan chucked the job in 1969 Francis took over. Then he gave Boom Boom Geoffrion a try, but he was back giving orders again before that season was out.

I guess Red Kelly comes next. He went from Parliament to

And you remember MacNeil. He replaced Claude Ruel. But that was last season. This year Scotty Bowman was given the Hab job. MacNeil was ostracized to Halifax.

When Bowman left St. Louis, Sid Abel was named to replace him. And you will recall Abel. He was general manager at Detroit. He resigned that job last year and was replaced by Ned Harkness. Doug Barkley was then made coach.

Surely, you remember Barkley. He quit before he was told to, and was replaced by John Wilson. John who? John Wilson! Wilson was coac at L.A. after Lavcoe left, and he was replaced by general manager Larry Regan two years ago.

Regan handled the Kings last year, and started out to do the same this season. But he soon fired himself and appointed Fred Clover to the post.

Fred Glover to the post.
Glover? Yes, he started at California, lasted only a few games, before he ran afoul of new general manager Garry Young. Young liked Vic Itasiuk better as a coach. Perhaps you recall Stasiuk. He was coach at Philadelphia last year. He got canned and Fred Shero is now in charge.

Gee, and then there's St. Louis. The Blues are into their fourth or fifth coach in the past few years. The confusion as to

Abel, Then McCreary, Now Arbour

When Bowman left for Montreal this past summer, Abel who had come from Detroit as general manager, decided to coach the club. When that didn't work, Abel was moved upstairs, and Bill McCreary got the job.

Quickly more disenchantment followed; McCreary was asked to leave, and now Arbour is in charge again.

Canucks got into the NHL; and he even coached one game for Buffalo this year. It was at Vancouver against the Canucks during Grey Cup weekend. If it was in bad taste then, it nevertheless, could have been the indicator for the future.

Punch and Joe are good friends. S₁ good, that when Imlach was between jobs at Toronto and Buffalo, and Crozier was at Vancouver, Crozier hired Imlach as a special, well-paid assistant. The only problem was he neglected to inform Canuck directors of the move, and for that, and other—rea-

The other three members of the group, goaltender Cesare Maniago, defenceman Barry Gibbs and centre Judge Drouin, were reluctant to comment on the disposition of their contacts.

Of the many reported encroachments on NHL player personnel reported in recent months, the WHA's biggest voice of recognition has been Derek Sanderson.

The Boston Bruin centre said early in December had been talking with Miami's Screaming Eagles and someone with that club had offered "a lot more than" $250,000 for a two-year contract.

Fergy Jenkins Gets Highest Cub Salary

CHICAGO (AP) Cy Young winner Ferguson Jen-kins, Chicago Cuba' most pro-ductive pitcher in half a cen-rury, will be the highest sala-ried Cub player in history at an estimated $125,000 for each of the next two Kessins. of the next two seasons.

Jenkins, who peaked a fiveyear string of 20 or more victories with a 24-13 record last season, signed Monday a two-year pact announced officially "in excess of $100,000" for each year.

Enterprises, Ltd., said at a news conference that $125,000 was "a good guess" for the new salary of the National League's winningest pitcher last season.

The husky 6-foot-5 Jenkins, from Chatham, Ont., dodged questions of how much over $100,000 his new contract pro-whatever they want,

John Holland, Cub vice-president, said it is against club policy to disclose salary figures, but pointed out that Jenkins's salary will be paid to Fergy's managing group. "They will handle all his money," said Holland. The syndicate includes anpiece of paper that I lost five games by one run in 1968. "I'm not setting any goals yet for 1972. I just hope I can stay healthy and do the club other lawyer, Larry Saan, and Jerry Patterson, who has handled business for hockey as much good as I can:' Next season, Jenkins will be striving to match the mark of and haseball players based in six 20-plus victory seasons set by Robin Roberts, 1950-55, Jenkins's group plans films and books featuring Jenkins. The towering Cub right-hander, thwarted in a bid for a $100,000 contract prior to the 1970 season, had a lot going for him and insisted on that salary level this year.

MARKS TOPS Last season, Jenkins led the National League in complete games (30) innings pitched (325), tied for most starts (39), and was No. 2 in strikeouts with 263. He was the first Cub pitcher to win 20 or more games for five successive seasons since Mordecai Brown did it from 1906 through 1911.

CONSIDERATION OF WHITE PAPER ON DEFENCE

The House of Commons has referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence the White Paper entitled "Defence in the "70s"; published by the Canadian Government in August 1971.

The Committee believes it important that individuals and organizations should have an opportunity to submit their views in writing on the redefinition of Canada's defence policy as outlined in this paper. It invites written submissions from those interested in commenting on the subject. The Committee will have limited time for oral pearings, and therefore any submissions should be comprehensive.

Without limiting the scope of comment, the Committee wishes to ascertain in particular the views of the Canadian public on those parts of the White Paper referring to the Protection of Canada, including the protection of sovereignty and independence, internal security, aid to the civil authorities and the use of Canadian Armed Forces for national development.

Copies of the White Paper on Defence are available from Information Canada. Written submissions to the Committee should be mailed not later than February 29, 1972. If possible, forty copies in English and forty in French should be provided. These submissions and all related correspondence and enquiries should be addresed to:

But there is something that can help: the U.S. law.

Right now, David Anderson, MP, and the Canadan Wildlife Federation have filed suit in the U.S. federal court in Washington, D.C., seeking a legal ruling that would compel the U.S. Department of the Interior to consider the possible dangers to British Columbia.

It may cost $50,000 to make sure that our case is heard through all the courts.

Victoria city council's attempt to rezone the Barnard waterfront estate in order to protect the property's parkland potential will be protested by the federal government at a public hearing Thursday.

A federal official has called the rezoning attempt "most unethical."

It was revealed last week that a federal agency, Crown Assets Disposal Corporation, has agreed to sell the property to Diamond Developments Ltd. for $253,205.

This price reflects the value of the land should it be devel-oped according to existing zoning, which is for garden apartments.

The 3.77 acres of grass, bush and tree-covered land is the last piece of open green space in the area of West Bay being overtaken by apartment

Board Slaps Partridge Settlement

Saanich school board wants the provincial government to explain why University of Victoria pres ident Bruce Partridge was given an $80,000 terminal settlement.

The board voted Monday to ask Saanich and the Islands MLA John Tisdalle to investigate whether: Partridge was under contract and the university had to buy it out; Paytridge was fired and the settlement is actually severance pay; the board of governors simply gave Partridge a grant.

Board chairman Jack Armstrong said today several board embers are concerned with the amount of the settlement in light of the "general shortness of funds for public education.

Armstrong pointed out Saanich school district is $40,000 over budget and is "scrimping and saving to make cuts." He said the settlement would pay the total honoraria for the board's seven members for 15 years.

Any instance of reckless spending of taxpayers' money, he said, makes him "pretty angry."

"Whenever anything concerns the local taxpayer, it is the board's duty to speak up."

He added there is "little justification" for the settlement if Partridge resigned because severance pay should not be given

Some board members did not favor getting involved in the issue, he said. The board also changed an earlier decision to ask UVic's board of governors for an explanation

Partridge's resignation is effective Jan. 31. Contirmation of settlement came last Friday from UVic board of governors chairman Lloyd McKenzie.

Armstrong said no satisfactory explanation for the settlement has been given.

Company uniforms for office workers are the latest fad among business executives.

And surprisingly enough, North Americans are agreeing to wear the business equivalent of a cattle brand or regimental tie without complaint.

tal tie without complaint.

Most men and women are, after all, practical. They recognize that talk about the rights of the individual and freedom of choice is one thing — but that buying a working wardrobe is quite another matter. Especially if their salaries are low and their tastes high.

Mrs. Judy Davis of P. R. Brown Real Estate says the 12 girls in her office are pleased with their company uniforms, introduced three years ago.

'None of us can afford big wardrobes," she said. "Wear-ing uniforms to work means we can buy something extra-

Company president Hervert Brown was impressed by the smart appearance of girls in uniform at local banks. He suggested a company uniform to his staff but left the choice of design and color up to the girls.

Pleasing Corporate Image

Brown thinks the uniforms present a pleasing corporate image. A recent article in the New York Times reports that in the United States about 3,000 of the nation's 14,000 banks, sav-ings and loan associations have adopted special on-the-job

The giant American Telephone and Telegraph Company has been working on a company uniform for the past year.

All this is part of a trend to substitute company clothes for the things people usually wear to work. Advocates of the trend avoid using the word "uniform" because of its connotations of 1984 regimentation. They prefer the term "career ap-

Sending her home to change can cause all sorts of nasty situations with unions, civil rights groups and, perhaps, her large, angry boyfriend.

Small-wonder that so many companies that deal directly with the public are choosing the easy way out of a tricky situation by opting for career apparel.

The day may come when office workers will be as easily picked out in a crowd as nurses or airline stewardessegs.

It all seems terribly familiar. Any Elizabethan gentleman could spot members of the various merchant and trade guilds by their distinctive dress. He would probably feel right at home in the space age if the present trend contin

Maternity Leave For Teachers Up to Doctor

Greater Victoria school board made a decision Monday night: pregnant is beautiful.

The trustees were discussing a proposed change in policy regarding maternity leave for teachers. One of the proposals was that "a teacher will normally be required to take leave, without pay, commencing five months prior to the expected birth of the child."

It was decided finally that the time of leave-taking would decided, as it actually is in most cases now, by the atten-

Dr. Philip Ney was one trustee who took issue with the proposed change.
"Why should a teacher have to leave after only four months of pregnancy?" he asked.

"It would be far better tor the students to be able to witness the baby growing inside the teacher as her pregnancy develops. There's nothing at all wrong with a beautiful pear

Ney suggested that students be able to feel the stomach of the pregnant teacher and feel the baby's heartbeat and move-Board chairman Allan McKinnon said a teacher in his ex

YOUR HEALTH: Dr. Walter Alvarez

Improving the Rhythm Method

According to a release from the American Medical Association, a new test has been found for predicting ovulation some days in advance. With ovulation, a tiny ovum, or egg, comes away from a woman's ovary. If the ovum meets a spermatozoon in one of the two Fallopian tubes which run outward from the top of the womb to an ovary, an embryo is likely to start growing.

The woman is then pregnant.

As many women know, in the rhythm method of contraception, the time of ovulation is estimated, and the woman must abstain from sexual intercourse during that certain time of the month. This is the only birth control method approved by the Roman Catholic church. So far it hasn't worked perfectly, because in some women, ovulation is irregular, and rarely, a woman ovulates not once, but twice a month.

That is why this new test, devised by Raymond Foster and William Busse of the Western Laboratories, will be good news to many people. It is a simple and inexpensive test of saliva. All a woman has to do it place a strip of chemically treated never in woman has to do is place a strip of chemically treated paper in her mouth for a few minutes each day. When it turns blue, she must abstain from sexual relations for from five to seven days. This may save many a woman from an unwanted pregnancy.

OPINIONS OF HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS

Now that some 18-year-olds have been given the vote, it is in-teresting to see how they feel on a number of important ques-tions. The following is the result of a remarkable study on the views of 23,000 young people which were reported in Northfield, Ill. The figures represent percentages of students approving:

Premarital sex relations under limited circumstances

Use of marijuana Birth control Limiting own children to two Legalizing abortion Volunteer army Censorship of movies and printed matter Guaranteed annual income water quality standards are likely to be contravened," the nerty Cove outfall appears to end up on the beaches, says an engineering report now being studied by Saanich council.

In its report prepared for the Capital Regional District, Associated Engineering Services Ltd. says: "The shore-line was surveyed to determine if recognizable sewage solids could be observed in the shoreline waters or deposited on the intertidal shore-

"Although normal sea flot-sam and jetsam were ob-served, no solids could be seen that were recognizable as originating with the out-fall."

Basically the nine-year-old outfall is working well, the report says, but it will need lengthening and modification to meet future population growth

The firm recommends that as the volume of discharged, sewage increases significantly, only comminution (slicing) plus chlorination and a diffuser pipe will be needed.

MONITOR PROGRAM Total cost of the modifications is estimated at $950,000. The same system with the addition of a primary treat-ment plant, the report says, would cost $3.8 million. Secondary treatment would cost $5.1 million.

The firm also recommends setting up a water quality monitoring program, both visual and bacteriological, at key points along the shoreline, al monitoring of the beach "for the possible detection of materials of sewage origin."

tees, in meetings which lasted until 11:45 p.m. Monday, decided to recommend to council that it support an in-depth study on a dam for the Gorge waterway;

The study was recommended by the Gorge Waterway inter-municipal technical committee last month in a report which urged Victoria, Esquimalt, Saanich and the Capital Regional District Board to embrace the concept of im-proving and protecting the Gorge's natural features

Municipal secretary Harold Moist said the two sub-committees parks and play-grounds, planning, zoning and didn't agree at times in separate and joint

They did generally agree on the need for protection and improvement of the Gorge as minimum public waterfront knocked out on Saturday provides for the cost of acouse in its forth-oming Session after orday, the dist day of January, 1972 quiring land.

Built in 1962, the outfall serves a populatin of about 10,300 persons in the Gordon Head-Cadboro Bay area.

flows may be less than these estimates. A flow measuring device is now being installed. The report says: "From information available at the time of the study, it would appear that the outfall has suc-cessfully protected the con-tiguous bathing waters and beaches, and has maintained quality standards within the guidelines designated by the provincial government for recreational use."

QUOTES REPORT

AESL also quotes an earlier report on the environmental aspects of the outfall's operation, carried out by the University of Victoria under contract to the district.

It says that report indicated that: "In general, the Finnerty Cove outfall appears to have served its purpose up to this time. It has removed the sanitary wastes of a substantial area without visible biological deriveds to logical degredation.

The beer company wants to sell its suds directly to the public from the brewery. If this is to come about, provincial law says the 100-acre cial law says the 100-arm has to be voted "wet."

So, the city has to appoint a returning officer, put out a voters' list, get a ballot box, rent a polling station, get two ballots printed up and have an official count on election day — all for the Franklands. Just how are the Frank-lands going to vote?

"I don't think that's anybody's business but ours," Mr. Frankland grumped in an interview. "That's a matter of privilege, something for our own consciences, and I'm not telling anybody.

Windbreaks for Shrubs Serve Two Purposes

Windbreaks for evergreen shrubs in winter serve a two-fold purpose — one being to filter a freezing wind before it-reaches the shrub; the second, to filter the effect of a drying wind on the foliage.

The damage by a freezing wind is often apparent shortly afterwards, but the effect of a drying wind is seldom noticed until early April or when roots become more active.

Evergreens, both the ones with broad green leaves all winter like the arbutus, laurel, yucca and camellia, and the coniferous such as pines, junipers and chamaecyparis, are not completely dormant in winter because loss of moisture (transpiration) from their green foliage demands maintainance by moisture replacement from roots to leaves.

In rainy, mild weather these shrubs and trees have no problem which is why so many thrive here on the Pacific Coast. It is when cold dry air comes in that the less hardy begin to suffer.

begin to suffer.

The soil is frozen for the few inches down where most of the feeding roots lie, thus making conditions impossible for the absorption of moisture.

Meanwhile the foliage, either needles, scales or leaves, is loosing moisture to the dry air moving across it. If this cannot be replaced by a supply coming up from the roots, the plant becomes dehydrated.

This is comparable to a human on a dry day in either winter or summer loosing moisture through the skin and experiencing thirst without being able to take in sufficient to replace the quantity lost.

By dry, we mean an unnaturally low relative humidity winter then we are inclined to disregard needs of outdoor

When small, young specimen shrubs are threatened, use cut branches of other hardier evergreens put in teepee fash-ion around the shrub.

By the same token, plantings of hardy material form natural windbreaks for less hardy material. This is the art of garden design—the use of a plant, not only for its own aesthetic value but for its value in the community of plants you are assembling for your pleasure.

Another hazard of winter occurs as sunshine is trapped in a sheltered angle of the house and is reflected from a white wall to the backs of shrubs planted a foot or less away from the foundation.

is that the back of the plant is more protected against the wall and is therefore "softer" — less hardy; another good reason for planting three feet out from the foundation.

Occasionally this drops to 35 or 40 per cent locally in the foundation. Improbably as this may seem, the reflected heat (or light) is capable of burning camellia leaves, and those of thinner evergreen texture like pieris, or leucothoe. The reason

Police said the freezer had been stored in the dining room of a townhouse owned by Mary Cassidy since the first of December when Todd moved to the Cassidy house in

FURTHER $50M FOR WINTER JOBS

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal government will spend another $50 million on grants for job-creating winter projects proposed by private groups, Manpower Minister Otto Land said today.

The amount will be added to the $50 million available to private groups under the Local Initiatives Program announced Oct. 14.

Pearlman described the $85 per day rate laid out in the Arbitration Act as "completely unrealistic" and said if those rates applied, school board and teachers would have a lot of trouble finding lawyers to arbitrate their salary disputes.

The arbitrations board was composed of Pearlman as the school board's advocate, Kenneth C. Murphy as the teachers' representative and Wil-liams as board chairman.

Board chairman Allan Mc-Kinnon said "there is no rea-son" the board should have to pay $350 a day to arbitrators "when the act clearly speci-fies a cost of $85 a day."

He suggested a letter be sent to the department of education, specifically Education Minister Donald Brothers (a lawyer), to ask why the board should have to pay so much.

Allen said he submitted his resignation to, the board of governors Monday but did not expect it to become public for

He described Fine Arts department dean Peter Garvie as "the finest university administrator I've ever seen" and said there was no disagreement which may have caused him to leave.

Board Slaps Partridge Settlement

Saanich school board wants the provincial government to explain why University of Victoria president Bruce Partridge was given an $80,000 terminal settlement.

The board voted Monday to ask Saanich and the Islands MLA John Tisdalle to investigate whether: Partridge was funder contract and the university had to buy it out; Partridge was fired and the settlement is actually severance pay; the board of governors simply gave Partridge a grant.

Board chairman Jack Armstrong said today several board members are concerned with the amount of the settlement in light of the "general shortness of funds for public education."

Armstrong pointed out Saanich school district is $40,000 over budget and is "scrimping and saving to make cuts." He said the settlement would pay the total honoraria for the board's seven members for 15 years.

Any instance of reckless spending of taxpayers' money, he said, makes him "pretty angry."

"Whenever anything concerns the local taxpayer, it is the board's duty to speak up.

He added there is "little justification" for the settlement if Partridge resigned because severance pay should not be given

Some board members did not favor getting involved in the issue, he said. The board also changed an earlier decision to ask 'UVic's board of governors for an explanation.

Partridge's resignation is effective Jan. 31. Confirmation of the settlement came last Friday from UVic hoard of governors chairman Lloyd McKenzie.
